AUTOMOBILE THIEVES VISIT MOKENA

Car Taken From Tewes Hardware Store Garage; Reported Found in Crete

Ben Tewes, Mokena Hardware man was much surprised Thursday morning when he went to his garage to get his Chevrolet car, to find the car had been stolen. The garage door had not been locked and the thieves had easy access to the car which they evidently pushed out onto the street by hand as there were foot prints in the soft ground of the garage floor. The car evidently was opened by the bandits as the back cushion of the car was left in the garage, which is located back of the hardware store.

Mr. Tewes lives in a flat over the store and did not hear any noise during the night, so it is thought the car thieves probably did their work when a freight train was going by as the noise of the train would drown out any noise the thieves might have made.

The car was equipped with a radio and Mr. Tewes had left about $25 worth of plumbing tools in the car.

The car was locked and Mr. Tewes had the keys in his coat pocket, so it is presumed the thieves must have forced the car doors in some manner.

Later in the day, the car was located in Crete, Ill. The car had been found near a filling station. It is reported that the radio had been removed from the car. Up to press time no further details as to whether the tools were stolen or not, were available. The car is insured against theft.

Orland R. N. A. Is 37 Years Old

A very interesting and enjoyable meeting was held by Laurel Camp No. 1796 of the Royal Neighbors of America of Orland Park on September 24, in Creer's hall. This was a special event, planned to commemorate the 37th anniversary of the Order and to do honor to the charter members of the camp.

A special demonstration was put on by the drill team and the members of the camp joined in a good old-fashioned community sing. Mrs. Harriet Gee sang, "We Love You Truly" in honor of the guests of the evening.

The degree work was beautifully exemplified upon the candidates of the evening, Miss Marion Taylor, who came into the camp by transfer from the juvenile department.

Following the meeting, a social hour was indulged in and games were played and a delightful lunch with birthday cake, candies and "everything" was thoroughly enjoyed by all.

The charter members honored were: Neighbors, Young, Cox, Kramer and Myrick. Neighbors Rust and Smith, who while not charter members, have been members of the camp for 33 years, were also honored. Neighbor Hilsabede of Willing Workers camp of Fairbury, Ill., was welcomed as a visitor.

The committee in charge of this celebration consisting of Neighbors Burkhardt, Smith, Rust, Ludwig, Morlock and Felton and much praise is to be given them for providing such an enjoyable evening.

SCHOOL BAND IS ORGANIZED AT MOKENA

Parents and children interested in the forming of a band in Mokena met in the school Wednesday evening. There were thirty children and their parents present. The band instructor, Mr. Wight, assigned the instruments to each band member and gave general instructions.

The parents were formed into a Band Parents Association, with Mrs. Ralph Coler, and her committee, composed of, Mesdames, Geo. Rinke, Henry Schevlin, Harold Spiess, Ray Meyers and Herbert Bruns, acting as officers until by-laws are drawn and an election can be held.

Plans were also made to create in the school a musical library. When a band members has completed his or her book of lessons, the book is to be filed in this library to be accessible to future members who may come into the band.

Time Question Very Confusing

The Will County towns, including Mokena, have returned to standard time. Many of the residents of these towns are obliged to have two clocks, one for standard time, one for eastern standard time, as those people employed in Chicago have to go by the eastern time as the suburban trains have not been set back an hour to conform with the standard time schedules. All the Cook county communities are on eastern time.

This time muddle is very confusing and it is generally hoped that the time question will be settled once and for all, by the voters of Cook County at the November 3rd election.

It is too bad that the antics of a few crack-brained politicians can create so much inconvenience for the general public without benefiting the latter.

Young Democratic Roundup Saturday

A caravan of 25 cars is being planned by the Young People's Democratic clubs of Will county, to attend a big roundup of Young Democrats in Springfield, Saturday, October 3.

Announcement of the Rally was received by James Meade of Joliet, chairman of the clubs in this county, Monday of this week, and a committee has been appointed to formulate plans for an organized trip to the Capitol City.

The features of the immense rally, which will last from noon to midnight will be a big dinner at 6 o'clock in the evening and a dance, to the music of a twelve-piece orchestra, at night.

Most of the afternoon will be given over to contests, games, and a brief presentation at four o'clock of all the State Candidates. Sam Hicks, chairman in charge of the affair, says the state committee is planning on an attendance of between six and seven thousand young people.

WILL COUNTY AUDITOR SUBMITS AUDIT REPORT

At last week's meeting of the County Board of Supervisors, Thomas K. Sprague, County Auditor submitted an audit report of the County Collector's office. The audit was made possible under the new powers granted Mr. Sprague during the past year.

The audit revealed the exact condition of all funds collected, held

THOMAS K. SPRAGUE
County Auditor

and disbursed by the County Treasurer, who by virtue of his office is also county collector.

Voluminous Report

A voluminous report, containing 49 different schedules and nine exhibits, made independently of the collector's records and without extra cost to the county, provides the supervisors with an audit that instantly discloses the amount collected and the disbursements within the jurisdiction of the office.

The compilation of this report required the consideration of each of the thousands of individual tax items paid or unpaid in the county, complicated still further by the fact that all the back taxes penalties for the year 1934 were waived by State law. All tax abated was accounted for as well as the tax protested by the railroads and the collector's records checked as far as possible.

Compiled by Townships

Sprague's audit is compiled by Townships so that each individual supervisor can see the amount of tax collected and uncollected in his or her own community, the amount disbursed and compare with other townships in the County. The collection and distribution is segregated into current tax, back tax, interest and costs, by township and the County as a whole, as well as by purpose. Several exhibits were included in the report covering statistical information regarding the taxes levied and collected so that the information will be available to the tax units and interested parties.

In the written report to the board preceding the schedules, Sprague calls attention to several minor omissions in the collector's records which should be straightened out, and is now preparing some important recommendations in regard to the collector's office which will soon be turned over to the finance committee. It is his intention that the Auditor's office should have a complete check on all funds handled by the county collector, as is now in practice in the office of the county treasurer.

Unusual Organizations

Marking the first time a supervisor or taxing unit has ever had a schedule showing the exact amount of back taxes due his or her township or taxing unit, the audit provides an unusual source of information. For example, the schedule of any township in the county reveals the back taxes uncollected by purpose for the opening and closing point of the audit; the amounts collected in real and personal taxes; the fees and penalties, and the various sums due the taxing bodies, which figure is what they have already received.

The Auditor's office has a complete control system of the County Treasurer and maintains records wherefrom valuable information and data is presented to the County Board and is available to interested parties relative to County government.

Will Hold Soil Conservation Meet

A soil conservation meeting will be held at Frankfort on Oct. 8th. A series of meetings are being held all over Will County at which farmers will discuss their problems and attempt to arrive at a program for soil conservation for 1937. They will base their discussions on actual experiences under the 1936 set-up, now being brought to a close.

"The Man Who O-O"THAT TWO-THIRDS RULE

IN 1832 a Democratic President decided to have his party's convention (the first it had ever held) renominate him and along with that decision he directed that the nomination of his running mate should be made by vote of two-thirds of the convention delegates.

One hundred and four years later a Democratic President decided to have his party's convention renominate him and along with that action he brought about the abolition of the century-old "two-thirds rule."

The man who originated that distinctively Democratic institution was Andrew Jackson. The man who ended its existence was Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Jackson had selected his secretary of state, Martin Van Buren, for the position of vice-president. The senate had only recently rejected Van Buren's appointment as minister to Great Britain and "Old Hickory" thought it would square accounts with that body to have the "Red Fox" preside over it. Also vice-presidents in those days usually succeeded to the Presidency through regular election and Jackson wanted Van Buren to be his successor.

So when his party prepared to hold its first convention in Baltimore in 1832, Jackson wrote out this resolution which he gave to one of his lieutenants to present to the delegates:

"Resolved, That each State shall be entitled, in the nomination of a candidate for the Vice-Presidency, to a number of votes equal to the number to which they will be entitled in the Electoral College under the new apportionment in voting for President and Vice-President; and that two-thirds of the whole number of the votes in the convention shall be necessary to constitute a choice."

The Baltimore convention was as completely dominated by Jackson as the recent Philadelphia meeting was controlled by Roosevelt so the delegates obediently adopted the resolution. During Jackson's lifetime several efforts were made to abolish the rule but all of them failed. After his death it became all but sacred and for the next hundred years the shadow of Andrew Jackson, in the form of this rule, hung over every Democratic convention.

GASTRONOMICAL

ONE of the best ways to win a Presidential campaign is to get a good slogan and din it in the voters' ears. A good slogan appeals to the instincts or to the emotions rather than to the intellect. Combine that fact with the old saying about "the best way to a man's heart is through his stomach" and it's easy to understand certain incidents in political history.

Back in 1840 when the Whigs were trying to elect Gen. William Henry Harrison over Martin Van Buren, the Democratic candidate, they raised the cry of "Van's Policy, Fifty Cents a Day and French Soup; Our Policy, Two Dollars a Day and Roast Beef." Would a hungry voter hesitate long between the two? Of course not!

But there was another gastronomical angle to this campaign. The "singing Whigs" set to the tune of "Auld Lang Syne" such words as these:

Should good old cider be despised
And ne'er regarded more?
Should plain log cabins be despised
Our fathers' built of yore?
For the true old style, my boys!
For the true old style,
Let's take a mug of cider now
For the true old style.

So the thirsty voters who wanted "good old cider" joined with the hungry voters who wanted "roast beef" and together they elected Harrison.

Although the Whigs' slogan in 1840 was the ancestor of the "Full Dinner Pail" of a later era, that expression didn't actually come into use until 1896. In that year the opponents were Democratic Bryan and Republican McKinley. The tariff was the principal issue and the Republicans had various prosperity slogans. But wise old Mark Hanna boiled them all down into the vote-getting slogan of the "Full Dinner Pail" and the American laborer who wanted one voted for McKinley and elected him.

Thirty-two years later the Republicans used a variation on the prosperity theme and their promise to the voters of "A car in every garage and a chicken in every pot" helped Herbert Hoover defeat Al Smith in the election of 1928.

Wood Carving in Black Forest

For hundreds of years the Black Forest people of Germany have carried on their wood carving and homecrafts. They make cuckoo clocks, some entirely of wood, furniture, music boxes and toys. In former days many gems were cut there, and the region was famed for its glass. After the discovery of America, this last industry experienced a great boom, for traders needed great quantities of beads to trade with the Indians.

BEDTIME STORY FOR CHILDREN

JERRY MEETS WITH AN ACCIDENT

IF JERRY MUSKRAT had not still been suspicious of Farmer Brown's Boy the accident might not have happened. Then again it might, if not at that particular time at some other and less fortunate time. Anyway, it happened, and Jerry will not soon forget it.

He was a little way up the Laughing Brook that morning when he heard some one coming down the Laughing Brook. By the sound he knew that it was one of those twolegged human creatures and at once Jerry started pell-mell back toward the Smiling Pool.

Now the water in the Laughing Brook was low. In many places it was too low for swimming, so Jerry ran along the shore just under the edge of the bank. There were many roots of trees and bushes from which the water had washed away the earth, and they crossed and recrossed each other. Sometimes Jerry ran under them and sometimes he jumped over them, whichever seemed easiest and best.

Now Jerry was in such a hurry to get back to the Smiling Pool that he didn't watch his steps as he should have. Perhaps it was because at the same time he was trying to watch behind him to see who it was that was coming. Anyway, in jumping over some of those tangled roots he didn't jump quite far enough and one hind foot slipped down between them. It went in easy enough, but when Jerry tried to pull it out it didn't come. It was held fast. You see his weight had forced two roots apart just enough to allow his leg to slip down between, and now they pinched it tight.

Jerry's first thought was that he had stepped in another of those dreadful traps. He hadn't a doubt of it. He was quite frantic with fear, and he tugged and wrenched with all his might. It was a wonder that he didn't break his leg. But the more he struggled the tighter he was held. You see, that leg began to swell at once where it was caught, and, of course, the more it swelled the more impossible it was to get it free.

Poor Jerry! Hope died as he heard the footsteps coming nearer and nearer. He twisted around so as to get a good look at the trap, and when he discovered that it wasn't a trap at all that held him he could hardly believe his eyes. The discovery would have been a great relief had it not been for those footsteps coming nearer and nearer.

"If I had time I could gnaw those roots off," thought Jerry as he wrenched and twisted and pulled. But there wasn't time, and so he continued to struggle, hoping to get free before he should be discovered.

I'll Pay My Way

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

I'll pay my way along life's road,
However heavy is the load
I'll pay my way for what I find,
With kindness try to pay the kind,
I'll pay my way to ev'ry child
That ever looked at me and smiled,
I'll pay my way—not take men's aid
And go my way, my debt unpaid.

I'll pay my way, pay God above
For His, by giving others love,
I'll pay my way, for ev'ry tear
That sorrow sheds give someone cheer,

I'll pay my way, not walk alone,
My lamp unlit, my light unshown,
I'll pay my way—and, if forgot,
I'll pay my way if blest or not.

RICE FORCED TO SIDES

THE HINDU RICE MYSTERY

HERE is a trick in which the magician duplicates one of the celebrated mysteries of the Hindu fakirs. A small bowl, a bag of rice and a table knife are the items used.

The magician fills the bowl with rice. He takes the knife, thrusts its blade deep into the rice grains; then raises the knife by the handle.

In uncanny fashion, the bowl of rice comes up with the knife blade and remains suspended until the magician grips the bowl with his left hand and removes the knife with his right.

The whole secret lies in the shape of the bowl. It must be of a type which bulges at the sides with a narrow mouth. In this type of bowl, the knife forces rice to the sides and the tight grains cause sufficient pressure to raise bowl and all when the knife is lifted.

They Took Their Annual Sky Outing

Every year the Hicks family of Detroit goes on a sort of aerial junket, and this season was no exception. Fred Hicks, a restaurant owner, Mrs. Hicks and the ten Hicks kids chartered a big transport plane, flew to Cleveland, circled the city a few times, and then returned, satisfied for another year. It all started in 1927 when one of the little Hickses promoted himself an airplane ride. Hicks, Sr., decided to take the whole family, and they liked it so well they've been doing it every year since.

Lesson for October 4

THE MACEDONIAN CALL

LESSON TEXT — Acts 16:6-15;
Romans 15:18-21.
GOLDEN TEXT—Go ye therefore, and teach all nations.—Matthew 28:19.
PRIMARY TOPIC—Paul's Wonderful Dream.
JUNIOR TOPIC—God's Call to a New Continent.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOP-IC—A Cry for Help.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC
—The World's Need of Christ.

The roots of American life, cultural and religious, reach back into the European soil on which our forefathers dwelt. The lesson before us is therefore of peculiar interest, for it relates the first step in the carrying of the gospel into Europe, and ultimately to America.

Paul, the missionary with a pastor's heart, felt constrained to go and visit the centers where he had ministered on his first journey. As he proceeded he was providentially hindered and led by the Holy Spirit to Troas. Here his next "step," seemed for a time to be a "stop," but soon God in a vision called him into Macedonia—and the gospel had come to Europe.

It is of interest to note that Paul,
as he thus began his second missionary journey, was

I. Obedient to the Spirit (Acts 16:6-12).

He had certain plans in mind.
He set out with a purpose, but he was willing to have his own itinerary changed as the Holy Spirit led. It is significant that the guidance was negative as well as positive. The stops as well as "the steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord" (Ps. 37:23). Christians will do well to remember that providential hindering circumstances may be as much the leading of God as the heavenly vision.
We are to be obedient to any guidance He gives but we are not to be merely passive, but actively submissive to His will. Paul was about the Father's business, not idly waiting for the speaking of a voice from heaven. It is to such a man or woman that the Macedonian call comes even in our day,
only now it comes from China,
India, South America, or Africa.

II. Faithful in Testimony (vv. 13, 14).

Paul, with his companion Silas, Timothy who had joined them at Lystra, and Luke (note that the
"they" of v. 8 becomes "we" in
v. 10) came to Philippi in Macedonia, but they found no Macedonian man waiting for them. Had they been mistaken in their vision and call?

True missionaries are not thus easily discouraged. They had come to be fishers of men. The fishman does not expect the fish to come to him. He goes after them.
Paul soon discovered that there was a place of prayer at the river, evidently a gathering place of devout Jews for worship. There he met the man of Macedonia who turned out to be a woman. For some reason the men were absent from the place of prayer on that all-important Sabbath morning.

Lydia was a woman of distinction, business ability, and of high moral character. But Paul knew that even good people need to be saved. He spoke the truth of God.
She accepted the message as God opened her heart, and at once she entered into

III. Fellowship in Service (v. 15).
Lydia proved herself to be one of that noble succession of women who have served Christ and the church. She and her household shared in the ministry of Paul by their Christian hospitality, thus helping forward the missionaries.
Observe carefully that she was not saved by her works, but that her works followed naturally after her salvation.

Turning now to one of the epistles of Paul we look at his exposition of certain

IV. Fundamental Missionary Principles (Rom. 15:18-21).

Those things which Christ had wrought (Paul took no glory to himself) through him Paul had consistently directed into fields where no one else had preached the gospel.

The spirit of the missionary of the cross is that of the pioneer, pressing ever onward, taking new land, not duplicating the work of others, not jealous of their success, not seeking comfort or glory.
Men need the gospel; they are lost without it. Let us press on into the yet unoccupied territory.

Sorrow and Enjoyment
We are sent here, in one sense, to bear and to suffer; but, in another, to do and to enjoy. The active day has its evening of repose; even patient suffering has its alleviations, when there is a consolatory sense of duty discharged.—Scott.

Undermine the Character Fear and gain are great pervasives of mankind, and where either prevail the judgment is violated.—
William Penn, in "Some Fruits of Solitude."

ADAMSON'S ADVENTURES A Costly Decision

Curse of Progress

Real Enjoyment
"Yes, sir, it was just about the ideal vacation. Nothing to do but loiter around all day in comfortable chairs. No mosquitoes, no insects of any kind. Pleasant, smiling people on all sides. No big bills running up, no relatives, no sunburn."
"Just peace and quiet all day long. A thorough rest for the mind and body — the kind of vacation you've always dreamed about."
"Yes, sir, it was ideal. We certainly enjoyed that vacation the boss took."—Judge.

Decree Nisi
They had quarreled, and she went to her mother and he to his club. Subsequently proceedings came before the court for separation.
"I understand your husband is willing to allow you the custody of the home, the cars, the radio, the poodle and the bank account, while he will take the children, the sewing machine, mangle and washing machine," said the judge.

Whale Can Be Drowned
A whale can be drowned if it cannot obtain oxygen; some species cannot remain under the surface for more than an hour at a time, while others, like the great rorqual whales, can remain submerged for 12 hours.

The Railroads Are Coming Back

The Rock Island has sent the following letter to all employees engaged in handling passenger traffic:

The pendulum is swinging back to the railroads! Passenger traffic, lost for a period of time, to other forms of transportation, is turning again to the comfort, safety and economy of rail travel. Air-conditioned trains, greatly reduced fares, low-cost dining car meals and tray service, equipment that provides every convenience in coach and chair car, as well as Pullman, and schedules that insure the fastest transportation consistent with maximum safety have brought the traveling public to a realization of the fact, that after all, rail service is in every respect the best that human ingenuity has yet devised.

If we all "pitch in" and help, greater results may be obtained. Much depends upon the warmth of the "Welcome back" which our employees extend to each passenger.

The success of our business is governed largely by the impressions we create. As a great business organization, we are often judged as a whole by the personality of one employee—it may be the telephone operator, the information bureau employee, the ticket agent, baggage agent, usher, conductor, trainman or a member of the dining car or Pullman personnel.

If each and every one of these employees with whom our patrons come in contact, display a cordial and courteous attitude and a disposition to do a little more than the obligations of the business demand, a favorable impression of our service is assured and a desire created in each patron to continue traveling the line on which he has been so comfortably and courteously served.

Such personal contact and activity for real service and resultant business increase require only small extra effort.

R. I. To Observe Fire Prevention

Coincident with the national observance of "Fire Prevention Week" October 4 to 10 inclusive—the Rock Island railroad will intensify its campaign against fire losses on its lines throughout the fourteen states it serves, in an effort to establish a record that will be carried through the coming year. Rock Island employees in all departments are being enlisted in the campaign through personal appeals and by means of posters displayed on the railroad's property all over the system.

Devour Nest Companions
Many young birds of prey, such as the eagles and buzzards, will often kill and destroy their nest companions. A big baby buzzard will pounce upon its smaller brother, quickly kill it, and afterwards make a meal of it, and later, when the parent returns with a plump young rabbit, she will seem surprised that her one remaining baby has no appetite.

$14,000 a Minute
As a spendthrift the Roosevelt administration has set a pace no other nation has ever equaled. It spends $14,000 each minute of the day and night; $840,000 each hour of each day, and $20,160,000 every day of the year. The taxpayers, and that means all of us, must pay it.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CHURCHES

"Reality" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, September 27.

The Golden Text was, "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him" (I Cor. 2:9).

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "Lord, thou hast been our dwelling place in all generations. Before the mountains were brought forth, or ever thou hadst formed the earth and the world, even from everlasting to everlasting, thou art God. O satisfy us early with thy mercy; that we may rejoice and be glad all our days. And let the beauty of the Lord our God be upon us: and establish thou the work of our hands upon us; yea, the work of our hands establish thou it" (Psalms 90:1, 2, 14, 17).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passages from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "God creates all forms of reality" (p. 618).

A Major Scandal

Here is what a Democratic newspaper, the Telegraph of Macon, Ga., states, "The extent of the propaganda being carried on in the interest of the New Deal, at the expense of the taxpayers of the country, has become a major scandal. This fact was impressively brought out in a recent talk of William Hard, one of the ablest and best informed of special writers at the national capital. He pointed out that one of the first things that needs to be done this year is to get rid of some of the fog that has been blown in the eyes of the people by this propaganda. Each of the many New Deal agencies in Washington, he says, has more propagandists on its payroll than can be found in all the combined departments of the entire government of the British Empire in London. The total number of press agents employed by the British Government is said to be 20. With possibly a few exceptions, this entire press agent set-up in the New Deal administration is entirely illegal. Aside from the expense of this illegal undertaking it is entirely unfair to the American people. These candid opinions from Democratic newspapers, certainly convinces anyone that the New Deal is despicable in maintaining a Bureaucracy that is not practical."

Insurance Head Warns of Inflation

Says Continued Government Borrowing Threatens Policy Holders.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—M. A. Linton, president of the $300,000,000 Provident Mutual Life Insurance company, warned policy holders of the danger of inflation resulting from the Roosevelt administration's program of expanding bank deposits through federal borrowing.
His statement, printed in the company's magazine, was similar to many made by Col. Frank Knox, Republican candidate for the vice-presidency, charging that New Deal spending of two dollars for every one taken in threatens the savings of millions of Americans. It followed on the heels of the President's "non-political" conference of insurance company heads in an attempt to offset apprehension aroused by the Knox charges.

The belligerent Colonel's latest blast, made at Helena, Mont., was: "I repeat that under the present policies of this administration no life insurance policy is secure, no savings account is safe, because the present spending policy leads straight to inflation. It is not the insurance companies or the savings banks that are unsound. They are as safe as the Rock of Gibraltar. It is the administration of the United States government that is unsound."

Mr. Linton warned that insurance policy holders have a precious interest in balancing the budget of the United States.
"The essence of life insurance," he said, "is a promise by the life insurance companies to pay dollars in the future when a given contingency shall occur. The policy holder knows that the dollars of the future are going to be used to purchase the food, clothing, and shelter that his dependents will need if he is called away by death, or that he and his wife will need after his earning days are over."

"To maintain a sound currency a nation must live within its income. Emergencies may make extensive borrowing necessary in times of depression. However, the longer the borrowing is continued the graver the danger that the situation will get out of hand and lead to disaster."

A. A. Ballantine, former under-secretary of the treasury, in a statement issued from Chicago, charged the Roosevelt administration with sacrificing the security of policy holders and bank depositors upon the political block.

"Mr. Roosevelt knows which side his bread is buttered on politically," said Mr. Ballantine. "If it is necessary to plunge this nation so deeply into debt by reckless and politically minded spending that printing press money is the only logical outcome, he will do it unflinchingly—even if it makes a piece of waste paper every life insurance policy and savings bank book in the United States."

Butter Imports Up

Says GOP Platform Will Save Sugar Beet Farms

SCOTTS BLUFF, Neb.—President Roosevelt has attempted to hamstring the sugar beet industry of the West, Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg declared here. He cited the establishment of quotas favoring Cuban and Philippine sugar producers, the horizontal decrease of 25 per cent in the sugar tariff, and the reduction of the sugar tariff in the Cuban reciprocal trade agreement to the lowest point in a half century.

The Republican party, he said, offers the domestic sugar producer a program which will apply restrictive quotas to continental imports only, and which will permit the American producer the non-competitive privilege of producing all the domestic sugar which the domestic market can consume.

"You need nothing else," said Senator Vandenberg. "It would be the greatest possible single practical contribution to 'farm relief' in a score of sugar states, including the great 'sugar bowl area' to which I am speaking."

It's Fire-Prevention Week--Here's What You Can Do to Help

Every week is fire-prevention week among intelligent, wide-awake people, says the Illinois Agricultural association's department of safety.

But just to make sure that no one overlooks the importance of annual fire losses, Oct. 4-10 has been named "Fire-Prevention Week". A fire hazard inspection service for farmers was recently started by the IAA.

The result of work done in the first county inspired these recommendations:

1. —Clean chimneys. Every farm inspected reported that chimneys had not been cleaned in 10 years or more. Here's how to clean chimneys.

Tie a gunny-sack around a brick fastened to a long cord. Lower in chimney and pull up and down to clean walls of accumulated soot.

2. Inspect chimneys for openings through which heat escapes, igniting woodwork. These openings usually are found at the junction of chimney and roof.

3. Clean attics, closets and basements thoroughly of all waste paper, oily clothes, cardboard, boxes and other trash.

4. Place stoves in the kitchen on metal pads. Red hot stoves often ignite floors.

5. Place stove pipes at a safe distance from walls and ceilings.

6. Don't put kerosene on a stove fire or bonfire to speed it up. Last year many Illinois housewives were burned this way.

7. Handle gasoline with care. The recent tragedy at Purdue university where a gasoline stove blew up only emphasizes its dangers.

8. Put a fire extinguisher in the kitchen and furnace room. Also use lightning rods, keep pails handy, ladders around farm buildings, axes, etc.

State May Aid Widening Of Lincoln Highway

Lincoln highway widening boosters were told at a meeting recently called by the Chicago Motor Club in Sterling that the state would lend a sympathetic ear to proposals for the improvement of the famous road from the Mississippi river to Chicago.

The state highway department, according to Ernest Lieberman, chief engineer, is now engaged in widening seven and a half miles of the Lincoln highway in the Chicago area from Cicero avenue east, at a cost of one-half million dollars; it has completed five miles from Aurora to Batavia, costing $420,000. Says Mr. Lieberman, "We are giving first attention to the part where traffic is heaviest and expect further development as funds become available."

The motor club asked groups from Sterling, Morrison, Fulton, and Clinton, Iowa, to adopt a resolution urging improvements on the highway to conform with the traffic needs, and also urging the construction of a system of elevated highways within the city to provide safe terminal facilities for the highway. This resolution endorsing the proposed widening and the elevated highway system was passed. Copies will be sent to all legislators in districts touched by the highway. A copy also will be sent to Gov. Horner.

They Are Unfair To The Laborer

We have been hearing a great deal against chain stores and the so-called evils of the system and to off set this a group of "independent grocery chains" have sprung up and they lay claim to helping the small merchant fight the chain store and the public is urged to buy the wares of the independents in preference to the chain stores. All of this sounds nice, but on the other hand we find that they are just as unfair to labor as the chain stores are accused of being. They are butting into other lines of business not connected directly with their line of merchandise. As an example, many printers are out of work due to the fact that many of these "independent" concerns instead of letting their members select their own printers to print their hand bills and posters, are known to offer to mimeograph these store bills at a cut throat price which no printer can meet and make a profit.

Thus printers lose this work and consequently hire less help which throws many a man out of a job and onto the relief rolls. And in the face of this unfairness to labor these big concerns expect to make the major portion of their sales to the laboring class. This is a very inconsistent attitude and the concerns carrying on this kind of practice had better about face and cut out their unfair attitude toward labor and help to create more employment instead of lessing employment.

The "independents" are not all in the same class for some do have their posters and bills printed and help create more work, but on the other hand there are those of the selfish streak who can only see everything just coming their way with no regard of the working man outside of what they can sell him.

This is a situation worth thinking over.

ORLAND

Fire Chief John Helenhouse was called out at 4 o'clock Sunday morning to extinguish a burning car on 159th street east of the intersection of Keane and 159th. Upon arriving at the scene Chief Helenhouse found that a new Plymouth car driven by a Chicago couple had left the highway and ran into a ditch with the front end of the car down in the ditch. The car had caught fire and everything back from the dashboard had been burned to a cinder. The disabled car was later towed to the Zerb garage in Orland Park.

The Democratic workers and leaders of this section will meet at the Democratic headquarters in the Kruse building on Friday night of this week. Plans for the forthcoming election will be considered.

The monthly meeting of the Child Welfare Clinic will be held in the Orland Park public school on the afternoon of October 14th.

Teachers' Institute

Monday, the three grade school teachers and Mr. Linden of the Orland Park public school attended the Cook County Teachers' Institute held at the Sherman hotel. Miss Priest visited the Parker High School in Chicago as the Institute was primarily concerned with grade school work.

Supt. Puffer presided and announced among other things that a trailer has been purchased and fitted to serve the purpose of a traveling library for Cook County rural schools. The library will contain almost 1,000 books, some of which will supplement the regular school text and others will be of real interest to all boys and girls.

Mr. Irving Pearson, Supt. of Winnebago County schools gave a description of the circulating library which has been in operation for some time in his county and stressed the great educational possibilities which rural schools and teachers have to do a fine educational job.

Dr. Howard A. Dawson, Director of Rural Schools, N. E. A. Washington, D. C., talked on the topic "Satisfactory Organization for Rural Education." Mr. Dawson reviewed some of the major administrative problems in American rural education, pointing out that education in America is the result of 145,000 different school boards, and that though much overlapping, confusion and inefficiency have resulted from this large number of boards, this system as a whole, has been good and has been in harmony with the American tradition of local self-government and best adapted to a democratic form of government. He stressed, however, that educators and administrators should have a clearer and more complete knowledge of the functions that education is to perform and that much planning and reorganization of local rural units must be done if American education is to be rendered effective without greatly increased taxes.

Dr. Mabel Carney of Columbia University gave a very interesting and inspiring talk on "New Curricula for Rural Schools." Decrease in size of families, increased leisure time, changed character of high school population and mobility of the average citizen were pointed out as some of the reasons why the curriculum is changing. Dr. Carney stated that "rural life" is more popular now than at any time since the start of the industrial revolution and that rural school curricula should be adapted to rural children and should supply those deficiencies which the community lacks.

Dr. Chase A. Stone gave an address on the "Activity Program", emphasizing some of the difficulties that the extreme proponents of the movement must face and solve and pointing out a "middle way" which he thought would best serve most schools.

The Average Man Is Better Off

William E. Clow, Jr., head of James B. Clow & Sons, Chicago manufacturers, has issued a pamphlet entitled: "A Business Man's Personal Views of the Roosevelt Administration," in which he declares that President Roosevelt's record entitles him to an overwhelming re-election.

Speaking as a business man of long experience, he says that failure of the country to re-elect Mr. Roosevelt "would be a crying act of ingratitude to a man who has given his all in a desperate situation to help the country in every conceivable way and who has succeeded so magnificently."

"Let's forget all arguments," he writes, "as to whether we should have gone off the gold-standard—as to whether the Government should have put on a relief program or not—as to whether aid should have been given to our agricultural population—as to whether the principles of NRA, such as maximum hours, minimum wages, no child labor, collective bargaining, etc., were good or bad and just ask one question and be honest about it.

"Is or is not the average man considerably better off today than he was on March 4, 1933? In other words, the average man has a somewhat increased living expense, slightly higher taxes and has assumed his small portion of the national debt, but over against this he has his wage, the value of any property he may own, returns he may be receiving from any investment, all increased more than proportionately. So that the net result is that the average man is better off today than he was on March 4, 1933.

"The real answer is that nine out of ten people are considerably better off than they were and, regardless of their political persuasion, they cannot deny it.

"Because, in the last analysis, the real job of a President is to do all possible to make the average citizen better off at the end of his term of office than he was at the beginning. And no one can doubt that the Roosevelt administration, assisted, of course, by the economic forces of the country, has accomplished just exactly this.

"Certainly, in modern times, no administration has tackled such a job or accomplished so much."

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
By WILLIAM BRUCKART
NATIONAL PRESS BLDG. WASHINGTON, D. C.

Washington.—It has been exceedingly interesting to watch the progress of the Democratic and Republican campaign committees in their efforts to shape and join the issues upon which the electorate will choose the next occupant of the White House. There has been a tremendous amount of hauling and filling, each side coming forth with trial balloons in an effort to find out what it is that will attract the most interest among the voters and to determine what particular matters afford the best vehicle on which they can ride into office.

From the beginning of this year, President Roosevelt has been trying to shape his issue on the basis of a single question—whether the American people in dollars and cents are better off then they were when he took office. I think admittedly that if Mr. Roosevelt could force that question into the center of the stage and make it the real issue, he would have very little campaigning to do. But the trouble is Mr. Roosevelt has been unable to accomplish his purpose and no little credit for his threat to force a joinder of issues on this point is due to the Republican leadership. The Republican managers simply will not be led into that trap. Thus, we must look elsewhere to see what the real issues are, or are likely to be, in this campaign decision.

It has nearly always been true that the issues prominent early in the campaign have proved not to be the issues at all near the end of a political battle. This year promises to be no exception. Political leaders attempt to figure out the proposition upon which their opponents are most vulnerable and obviously this figuring takes place in advance. It has to happen that way in order that methods of attack can be arranged in advance.

The New Dealers thought they could smoke out the Republicans by shouting far and wide that the people as a whole are better off than they were when Mr. Roosevelt took office. But, again, it was a case where political strategy did not work. Even though many hundred thousands of people are better off, the fact remains that there are some twenty million persons receiving relief in one form or another and the further fact remains that there are somewhere between nine million and ten million workers without jobs. Consequently, Mr. Roosevelt's question whether people were better off in dollars and cents did not quite click.

In the meantime, the Republicans have found what they believe to be a very vulnerable spot in the New Deal armor and they are shooting at it with machine-gun rapidity. This question, this spot, centers around taxation. The Republicans apparently thought at the start of the fight that Democratic waste of federal money and the vast debt that was piled up would force a revulsion of feeling against New Deal policies. So they started out on that campaign horse. But they found that the question of taxation over-shadowed the other, even though the taxation about which the Republicans are talking has been an offspring of the alleged waste of the party in power.

I doubt that the taxation issue would have been as important as it is proving to be had not the New Dealers made a mistake in political strategy. This mistake, it may be said in passing, illustrates how very minor things influence the ultimate result in politics to a greater extent perhaps than in any other activity of American national life. The mistake which I refer to was made by Attorney General Cummings.

The story of the circumstance chronologically is something like this: The Republicans from their headquarters in Chicago began calling attention to increased tax burdens in connection with their exposure of the increase of more than thirteen billion dollars in the country's debt. They pointed out how, if the Roosevelt administration had not wasted money, preparations would not have to be made for raising the taxes and how, if this waste had not occurred, tax increases which we already have had would not have taken place.

As a part of the demonstration of increased taxation the Republicans issued campaign literature itemizing the amount of taxes each and every one of us pays on the common every-day necessities of life. They showed how each loaf of bread, each pair of shoes, each pork-chop, among other things, bears so much tax which all of us pay in buying those necessities of life.

Probably the distribution of this campaign literature by the Republicans would not have stirred up so much fuss in and of itself had it not been for the action of Attorney General Cummings. The Attorney General made some public threats that he would seek to indict those who were responsible for distribution of this information, claiming that a federal law had been violated. Being attorney general of the United States, any statement from him got wide distribution.

But the Republicans, recognizing the potentialities of this situation, issued a challenge to Mr. Cummings to proceed with his threat of indictments. Their publicity statement on the point was just as virulent as that of any red-blooded American boy who says to his playmate, "I dare you to!"

Well, the rejoinder of the Republicans rather put Mr. Cummings on the spot.

I presume probably the threat and the resulting challenge still would have amounted to nothing except that the method employed by the Republicans capitalized on that threat by accusing the attorney general of seeking to prevent free speech and to prohibit discussion of campaign issues. If there is one thing that the American people resent, it is any attempt by a governmental agency of whatever character it may be that seeks to stifle discussion. They look upon it as a sign of dictatorship. Somewhere in their veins still courses the virus that overthrew King George in the birth of this nation.

That is why the Cummings threat is so important.

President Roosevelt announced the other day that he is preparing to start reorganization of the federal administrative agencies. He said he had arrived at the conclusion that such a course was necessary because there has been overlapping in function and jurisdiction among the many agencies created by the New Deal. It is the second time that the President has proposed reorganization of the governmental units and his new announcement promises to attract as much attention as did his original announcement which was made when he was a candidate during the 1932 presidential campaign.

For a long time, it has been plainly evident to observers in Washington that New Deal agencies were literally falling over one another and that many of them were constantly in conflict with others because the laws or executive orders, chiefly the executive orders, by which these agencies were created, did not clarify their jurisdiction or their function.

A good deal of this trouble obviously had its origin in the haste that characterized the early efforts of the Roosevelt administration to establish machinery by which problems of the depression could be solved or alleviated. It always happens that when governmental agencies are created in such haste, ridiculous situations result. It was the case during the World war and it has been the case during the New Deal's efforts to solve depression problems under the emergency powers granted by congress. The truth seems to be that there is more overlapping, more conflict, now than there was during the World war.

I have known of numerous instances where one agency, under authority given it by the President, has promulgated rules and regulations having the force of law that did not conform to rules and regulations dealing with the same matter but coming from another unit of government. In addition, I have seen different interpretations placed on the same statute or the same regulation by two different agencies. In consequence, the citizen whose business practices or personal affairs were touched by government edict found himself prohibited from doing a particular thing on the one hand and ordered to do it on the other.

Thus, it would seem that it is high time for something to be done about re-organization. It would seem equally to be high time for elimination of some of the extra red tape of government which has been wound about the private lives of American citizens by the New Deal. Goodness knows, there was plenty of red tape before the New Deal; it certainly is worse now than it was before.

The thing that seemed to interest most of the writing fraternity in Washington, however, was not so much the alleviation of the conditions which I have mentioned, but the political aspects of the presidential announcement that new reorganization plans were under consideration. Some of these writers who are critical of the New Deal went back to the 1932 campaign records and dragged out to public view Mr. Roosevelt's promises respecting governmental complexities.

ILLINOIS BREVITIES

Fire swept a part of the Salem Township High school, causing damage estimated at $2,000 to $5,000.

Tom Benton Camp, seventy-six years old, La Grange, veteran Illinois editor and lawyer, died in his home after a long illness.

Gladys Irene, twelve, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Carlock, died in Pana of tetanus, caused by piercing her foot when wading in a ditch.

Jack Baum of Lebanon, was killed when a milk truck he was driving left the pavement of highway 50 near O'Fallon, plunged into a creek bed and overturned.

Monroe Reed, watchman for the Nashville Industrial company, died of injuries suffered in an explosion in a building his firm was preparing to wreck in Venice.

Ralph Sanchez, thirty-eight years old, Mexican, was sentenced at Sterling to 14 years in the penitentiary when he pleaded guilty to the murder of Mark Campos on March eighth.

Harry U. Hartzell, sixty-seven, postmaster for the last two years at Orangeville, died after a two months' illness. Hartzell was publisher of the Orangeville Courier for forty-five years.

Thomas Williamson, eighty-nine, died at his home in Bellerive. He was a veteran of the civil war and his death leaves only seven surviving in Jefferson county who served in that war.

Despondent because he wanted to retire from farm life and could not, Elmer Schrottberger, fifty, hanged himself in an oats bin on his farm near Morris. He left a wife and four daughters.

Supervisors of Henry county have appropriated $1,000 for payment of groundhog bounties, enough for more than 6,600 groundhogs under the present system of 15 cents a scalp.

Right Rev. Monsignor Joseph Selva, eighty-four, died at a hospital in Galesburg after a long illness. He was ordained in Italy and had spent more than fifty years as a priest in the Peoria diocese. A few years ago the title of monsignor was conferred on him by the pope in recognition of his service.

Four hundred and thirty persons, virtually every resident of Roscoe, united in presenting in tableau and drama a history of the United States constitution before a crowd of 7,000 visitors and former residents. The occasion was the twenty-seventh annual fall festival, sponsored by the village improvement association.

Plans were announced in Springfield for the third annual statewide essay contest sponsored by Governor Horner's committee on citizenship and naturalization. Executive Secretary Avinere Toigo said the essay subject would be "an adequate citizenship program for our foreign born."

Walter Meyer, twenty-two years old, a paroled convict, and Miss Dorothy Bergholz, nineteen years, were indicted by the Du Page county grand jury at Wheaton for the murder of Policeman John B. Frost of Lombard. Policeman Frost was shot to death in Elmhurst September 3 when he sought to arrest the two for the theft of the Lombard police car.

The Purple Grackle, a tavern and dine and dance place on U. S. highway 20, four miles east of Elgin, was raided by Cook county highway police and three men were arrested on charges of running a racing handbook. The men seized are James B. King, forty years old, booked as the keeper; Russell Buchanan, twenty-five, and George Kelly, twenty-four, all of Elgin.

Bids for the construction of thirteen downstate armories were rejected by the Illinois armory board "on account of the obvious fact that the bidders misinterpreted the instructions." The board voted to readvertise for bids, explaining in a statement that the "range" between the amounts of the bids was so broad that it was "only fair that the instructions be clarified and an opportunity be afforded for all to bid again."

Although still 26 per cent below average, a one per cent improvement during August in the combined prospective yield per acre of the major Illinois crops was announced in the report of the state and federal agricultural departments. As irregular rains over part of the state checked drought damage, Agricultural Statistician A. J. Surratt said prospective production of feed grains was still 44 per cent above the all time short crop of 1934. Feed grain production prospects were estimated at about 30 per cent less than last year and 40 per cent under the 1928-1932 average.

Rev. Vincent Kulikauskas, M. I. C., vice provincial of the Marian Fathers of America and rector of St. Mary's seminary at Hinsdale, died there after an illness of several months. He was fifty-seven years old.

Funeral services were held in Elgin for William Medigar, eighty-seven years old, who as a young man served in the old Second cavalry in Indian warfare in the northwest. Mr. Medigar died at the home of his nephew, Bernard E. Gierz, Elgin contractor. He enlisted in the army in 1870 and served until 1884.

Sophistication Is Going Out—

Youth Doffing the Soiled Mantle of Those Embittered by Disappointment

A COLLEGE DEAN said recently that being sophisticated is going out of fashion.

Can it be true that the craze for sophistication—to appear blase, to seem worldly wise, to know it all, to be hard-boiled and contemptuous of the simple things—can it be true that modern youth is through with it?

And why? Is the advent of old fashioned hats and ruffles so influencing our point of view that modern youth now wants to throw sophistication into the discard?

I think I know the reason, says a woman writer of international reputation. Modern Youth must have found out the real meaning of the word. Poring over their dictionaries they must have accidentally bumped into the derivation of "sophisticated."

For "sophisticated" means adulterated. Look it up and see if it doesn't!

And come to think of it, it couldn't have a better name. If the wisest of us had tried to put a fitting label on that loss of youth's natural and beautiful freshness—if a genius had tried to express that warping of standards, that tainting of taste, that souring of outlook, that premature aging of all the sensibilities he could have manufactured no better word than "sophisticated."

For sophistication is an adulteration of viewpoint, of judgment, of taste by the taint of frustration, the bitterness of disillusionment, the poison of disappointment, the dregs of the cup of poor experience. True, life is not all beauty or joy or perfection. Neither is it all bitter or sour or wrong.

One of the most powerful weapons in the hands of youth is its freshness, its faith to write on its own slate only beauty and perfection. And when youth prematurely don the soiled and shabby mantle of those who have known disappointment and failure, it does right to call this by the name "sophistication"—a synonym of adulteration.

Hooked Fish

Fish do not seem to suffer much when they are hooked. About the jaw there are few nerves which could cause the sensation of pain. Some trout have been known to be hooked two or three times in the same day, the fisherman using the same type of bait.

Fish, no doubt, have a sensation of discomfort, but not as great as that of the higher animals. In general, a fish must feel some pain on some parts of the body, but has few nerves around the mouth, where it is apt to be hooked.

SYNOPSIS

Sleepy Cat, desert town of the Southwest, is celebrating the Fourth of July. Jane Van Tassel, beautiful daughter of Gus Van Tassel, belated owner of Gunlock ranch, has arrived from the East for the first time. She watches the Frontier Day celebration in company with Doctor Carpy, crusty, tender-hearted friend of the community. Henry Sawdy of the Circle Dot ranch, tricked in a fake horse race the day before by Dave McCrossen, foreman at Gunlock, plans revenge. He enters Bill Denison, a handsome young Texas wrangler, in the rodeo which McCrossen is favored to win, and lays heavy bets on him. Unknown to the crowd, Denison is a champion horseman. McCrossen and the young stranger tie in the various events. Denison then drops a cigarette carelessly. Racing down the track full tilt, he picks up the cigarette. The verdict goes to Denison when McCrossen refuses to attempt the stunt. Entreated by the crowd, Denison agrees to perform another trick. Jane Van Tassel is asked for her bracelet and throws it on the track. Just as Denison rides to pick it up a yell from Barney Restlock, a McCrossen henchman, scares the pony, nearly costing the rider his life. Gun play is prevented by the intervention of Doctor Carpy. Back on Gunlock ranch, after two years in Chicago, because of her father's illness, Jane gets lost riding in the hills and meets Denison, now a neighbor, who guides her home. Not knowing her identity, he speaks bitterly of Van Tassel. She tells McCrossen who brought her home and he denounces Denison as a cattle thief. Later she asks Doctor Carpy why her father is unpopular and he tells her it is because of Van Tassel's ruthless and unscrupulous character. McCrossen tries to woo Jane, but is sharply rebuffed. Once again she loses her way in the hills and meets Denison. On impulse she gives him her bracelet for guiding her home. Their interest in each other growing, she reveals her identity to him.

Carpy laughed his dry little laugh. "Well!" he exclaimed benevolently. "You did pick a real outsider, didn't you? What did you think of the brute?" In her confusion, Jane hesitated. "Why—I thought him not bad at all," she declared with spirit. "What do you think of him?"

"Why, to speak just offhand, Jane, I'd say Bill Denison had his enemies; but I think he's about as square and open-and-aboveboard a young fellow as lives in the hills. I don't suppose any of your father's following would agree with me."

"He struck me, too, Doctor, as just such a man," interposed Jane impulsively.

"What do you know about things like that?" asked Carpy jocularly. "You're just a kid! He might be a horse thief for all you could tell, girl."

Jane drew herself up. "Don't be so sure about every girl's being a fool—some or them might fool you! He told me he used to work at Gunlock. What was the quarrel between him and Father?"

Dr. Carpy laid his finger on the edge of the table and braced himself. "It's a kind of long story," he began, not knowing exactly how to tackle a delicate subject.

"I've lots of time," remarked Jane disconcertingly.

"To begin with, your father was always a grabber, Jane. Probably couldn't help it—just built that way. I suppose that hurts your feelings?"

The girl winced a little. "Whether it does or does not, Doctor, I want to hear both sides, and I know you are honest. Go ahead, please."

Her appeal was not unheeded.

"You're a kind of surprise, Jane," continued the doctor slowly, "for in spite of the fact that the family name is not very popular in this country, everybody is talking about you—how nice you are, and all that."

"Just to show you, Jane, how feeling has been; we've got an ex-sheriff out here, one of the best and biggest-hearted men in the mountains. He's a character. He happened in to the hotel the other day, and we got to talking about you—now don't blush or get confused, girl—you're entitled to a good send-off, and I gave you a good one."

"Old Bill Pardaloe set where you're setting, with his feet on the table, chewing tobacco, listening to every word and never, all the time, saying one word himself. When I got through, I told him about you, and that you had an aunt in Chicago who'd been out here—a regular sport and no fancy airs because she had a rich brother."

"Pardaloe—now I'm telling you this, Jane, only to show you how some of us felt—Pardaloe shifted his quid and says, 'Doc, it's kind of hard for me to believe there's one decent Van Tassel in the world; I'm damned if I'll ever believe there's two.'"

"Oh, Doctor!"

"Don't take it hard, girl. One thing about these frontier men, they're as open-minded and simple as children. Just a word or a smile from an up-'n'-coming girl like you and you'll have 'em eating out of your hand."

"Bill Denison worked awhile for your father; he was foreman at Gunlock. Your father thought Denison was just about right. He could do everything—and do it well. He made so much money for your father that he gave him a share in the cattle, a tenth, I believe it was. When he quit, Denison asked for a settlement on his share. Your father told him he didn't have a share. They went to law about it. Denison got beat—he didn't have anything but a verbal contract. So Bill went back to live on his own ranch next to the Reservation. It's small, but has plenty of good water from a big spring that makes it valuable. Then he began running off enough Gunlock cattle in small bunches—cattle he claimed belonged to him, anyway—to pay off what your father owed him. There was a great hue and cry. But Bill was too smart for the Gunlock boys—privately, I think the Indians helped Bill. They swear by him. "So Bill was cursed by your father as a rustler. It made cattlemen laugh, thinking of your father's own reputation in that respect. And the old man brought a lawsuit against Bill to oust him from the little ranch, account bad title. That suit is still pending in the land office at Washington. Now that's just about the story, Jane. If I've hurt your feelings some, I didn't do it because I wanted to. You asked me to tell you the truth. Did I do right or wrong?"

The shock of the doctor's story so humiliated Jane that she wanted only to get back home and hide what she felt to be the shame of her father from everybody. She had promised to ride back the hill trail with Denison; she felt she just couldn't do it. She took a short cut home across the desert. Her mystified and disappointed admirer, after lingering patiently in the hills till dusk rode into town only to learn at McAlpin's barn that Jane had taken her pony out early in the afternoon.

It was a painful night. She realized why the name she bore was so unpopular in Sleepy Cat.

Her depression bore her down; even Quong saw that something was wrong. He cooked special dishes to tempt Jane's appetite, but her appetite could not be tempted.

"Why don't you get out and ride any more?" asked Bull Page one day. "You haven't been on a horse for two weeks—just sit moping around the house, eating nothing, talking nothing, just reading and reading. Must be your liver. Next time I'm in town I'll buy a bottle of Belcher's Liver Regulator for you."

"What Did You Think of the Brute?"

"Liver regulator!" laughed Jane scornfully.

"Quong takes it," urged Bull, quite serious.

"I don't need any liver regulator, Bull. Just let me alone. I'll be all right."

For another two weeks Bull was worried. Then suddenly Jane relented. She would take a horseback ride if Bull would ride with her—not other-wise.

They started together. It was afternoon. The air was thick with a soft haze that tempered the sun's rays. The trail led in and out of the thin pine woods.

She began to think her nervous apprehension of meeting Denison again had been a wasted worry. Indeed, she and her guide were homeward bound within a mile of the ranch house when both heard the clatter of hoofs behind them. Jane would not have looked around for a million dollars. Bull told her there were two men coming up.

"Who are they?"

"Looks like Carpy and Bill Denison." Jane's heart raced. However, this seemed not so bad. Three men and one woman were better than one man and one woman. Carpy and Denison approached together.

"Where are you riding to today, doctor?" asked Jane.

"Gunlock ranch."

Jane showed surprise. "Who's sick at the ranch?"

"One of the boys," said Carpy.

"That's the first I've heard of it," exclaimed Jane. "Who is it?"

"One of the boys that got cut up last night downtown. I sewed him up and want to see how he is. Nothing serious, I guess," said Carpy.

"Any news in town, doctor?" asked Jane, though not in the least interested in Sleepy Cat news.

"Nothing but the brush fires up North. This whole country's dry as tinder. I hope the winds will keep 'em up North. What do you hear from your father?" asked the doctor in return.

"Oh, he's better," said Jane. "He talks about coming home pretty soon."

"Well, that's news," commented Doctor Carpy, noncommittally. "He's got a wonderful constitution, that man," thinking to himself that it was much too good. "How have you been yourself, girl?"

"Oh, I'm just fine, doctor."

"Rarin' to go, eh? Come on, girl, I'll race you through this pine belt."

Jane saw her chance to escape an uncomfortable situation, for Denison hadn't said a word. She dashed gayly ahead and outran Carpy. But Denison followed her, overtaking her and riding alongside.

The spurt couldn't last forever, though Jane prolonged it to the best of her ability. She wondered whether she had jumped from the frying pan into the fire; she was alone now with Denison.

When she slackened her pace, out of breath, her cheeks were aglow.

"I wouldn't push that pony of yours too hard," suggested Denison incidentally. "He's a nervous critter."

"Oh, he's all right," said Jane lightly, "but it does shake one up, doesn't it?" she exclaimed, panting a little.

"It does," agreed Denison. "But I got my real shakeup when I spied you on the trail. I've been staking myself out alone on this trail every day for a month or so, hoping to get sight of you."

"I haven't felt much like riding lately."

"I was afraid you were sick. I watched for the doctor coming out, but I didn't see him. I used to ride up Gunlock Knob every day or two to see if I could see anything of you."

"I wish you wouldn't do such things. Where is Gunlock Knob?"

"It's that peak over by the spring. It's really on your father's ranch, I guess, but I'm always careful not to run into any of your men."

"I'm sorry, but you mustn't look for me any more—please don't." She glanced at him firmly as she spoke. To Denison she had never looked so lovely.

"Why?" he demanded. "Have I—"

"You haven't, but I have—I guess that's the way to put it. I mustn't see you any more. I don't expect to remain in this country very long, anyway."

"What have I done, Jane?"

"Nothing, nothing."

"Somebody's been telling lies about me," he declared with some bitterness.

"No."

"If you'd tell me what they are, I could answer them."

"I said, no! No one has talked about you." His sudden intensity frightened Jane. She burst into tears.

"Now I've made matters worse!" he exclaimed penitently. "I didn't mean to scare you, Jane. I guess my bark's worse'n my bite. But it makes me wild to think I've been lied about to you."

"You haven't," sputtered poor Jane. "Don't you believe me when I say nobody's been talking about you?"

"Please excuse me, then. I do believe you. But if you'd give me a chance to, I'd be willing to tell you every mean thing I've done in my life—and leave it all to you. Don't condemn me without a hearing—that's all I ask."

"Nobody is condemning you. I'm only, if anything, condemning myself."

"For what?" he demanded.

"For ever coming to this country at all, if you must know," she declared in angry desperation.

"But, Jane, that doesn't sound reasonable," protested her companion.

"I can't help that," she said petulantly. "I wish I'd never seen this country. And I'm going to leave it, the very first minute I get a chance. Don't see me any more. I don't want to see anybody till I can leave here and forget everything."

"Just as you say, Jane. This is some trouble I don't know about," he said.

"But if I can't see you any more, Jane, please remember that wherever you are, here or ten thousand miles from here, I love you."

Jane got home thinking of how wretchedly she had handled the situation with Denison.

It proved to be her foreman, McCrossen, who had been cut up in a gambling quarrel.

Jane kept Doctor Carpy for supper, and that evening she held him as long as she could. She felt down in the depths.

When he started for town, Jane walked out in the moonlight with him, talking and clinging to his hand. When he mounted, she still asked questions to keep him talking and kept his hand in hers.

"Jane," he said, "there's something hurting your mind, not your body. Do you want to tell me, girl?"

"Not tonight, doctor."

"Sometime, maybe—come to me just the same as if I were your father. You are a lovely young girl, Jane. With what God has given you, you can make or break any man in the world. Use your power mercifully."

Her face fell against his hand. He felt on it the warmth of her tears. "Mustn't worry, my child. And if the load, whatever it is, gets too heavy—you know where to bring it," he added, wheeling away.

She had promised Doctor Carpy to ride every day, and while attending the wounded man he kept close tab on her, but she avoided the main trails and kept to the hills near the ranch house. Carpy brought little news from Sleepy Cat, but he spoke of the forest fires north of town.

"I hope we shan't be bothered here," said Jane.

"No danger here unless they cross the river. You haven't much timber on the east ranch. There's none to speak of over on the range. But you've got a lot scattered around here in the hills. If it should get down into the reservation timber, there would be hell to pay."

Black Satin Frock for Autumn Wear

Introducing Autumn's smartest frock. Snug at the waistline and flared below, a youthful interpretation with snap and dash.

The blouse has a clever feminine touch in its soft gathers that peep cunningly from beneath the yoke, which is topped by a narrow standing collar that ties in a dainty knot. To please your whim, omit the necktie and substitute a neckerchief, or ascot tie; then again forget about the buttons, open the yoke, press down the sides forming a V and turn it with a bright boutonniere. You may have your way about the sleeves, too, for the pattern offers both, long and short. A graduated gore reduces the sweep at the hipline and gives the much desired flare to the hem.

Barbara Bell Pattern No. 1949-B is available in sizes 12, 14, 16, 18 and 20. Corresponding bust measurements 30, 32, 34, 36 and 38. Size 14 (32) requires four and three-eighths yards of 39-inch material, four and one-fourth yards with short sleeves. Price of Pattern, 15 cents.
